UK Outlook for Friday 9 Apr 2021 to Sunday 18 Apr 2021:
A period of less cold and more settled conditions will once again give way to another very cold and wintry picture, especially for northern areas. Uncertainty remains in how far south this very cold air will extended. Within this a mixture of sunny spells and showers remains likely. Some of these outbreaks may be wintry, especially in the north. Furthermore, strong winds are expected for norther parts at first, though easing later. After this, conditions are likely to turn drier and more settled for most, with greatest likelihood of unsettled spells in the NW. Temperatures look to be largely below average for this time of year, with notable overnight frosts developing throughout. There is a possibility that temperatures will lift nearer to or slightly above average later in the period.
